

Worksites Market Planning Lead — Malaysia

Kuala Lumpur | Full-time | 2026

About the Company

We are a financial technology and distribution methodology firm working with leading insurers and healthcare partners to build high-performance distribution channels across multiple markets. In Malaysia, we are operating a worksite health screening programme that connects employees attending government-funded health screenings with financial protection products — at the moment they are most receptive to thinking about their health.

We are building a dedicated market planning function to own the corporate pipeline that makes this programme run. This is a B2B sales and relationship management role at the centre of our Malaysia operations.

The Role

The worksite health screening programme depends on a steady pipeline of confirmed corporate events. Companies arrange health screenings for their employees as a workplace wellness benefit — government-funded for eligible employees, subsidised or packaged for the rest. Our job is to find those companies, build relationships with the HR decision-makers, and convert that relationship into a confirmed worksite event — and then into a repeat one.

This is not an insurance sales role. You are not selling policies to individuals. You are selling a wellness programme to HR Directors, Wellness Managers, and company decision-makers who have wellness budgets, wellness KPIs, and employees who need this benefit. Your output is a confirmed event calendar and a growing base of corporate accounts.

Location: Kuala Lumpur, with travel to corporate accounts and worksite events across Klang Valley and nationally as the programme scales.

What You Will Do

Pipeline development:

- Identify and segment target companies across priority industries and company sizes — you are not calling everyone; you are building a territory plan and working it systematically
- Own the outreach process: first contact, pitch, follow-up, objection handling, and booking confirmation with HR departments and company decision-makers
- Manage the worksite event calendar end-to-end — from initial conversation to confirmed date, logistics agreed, and employee communication sent
- Build and maintain a CRM-style pipeline view: which companies are in conversation, at what stage, and what the next action is

Corporate account management:

- Own the ongoing relationship with confirmed corporate accounts — not just booking the first event, but ensuring the follow-up event is already in discussion before the first one happens
- Understand each account's wellness calendar, budget cycle, and employee demographics so you can pitch the right format at the right time
- Identify expansion opportunities within existing accounts: different departments, different office locations, a higher headcount event

Clinic and partner coordination:

- Work alongside the clinic partners who provide the screening infrastructure — align their existing corporate relationships with our programme so both sides benefit from the outreach
- Manage logistics hand-off between the confirmed corporate booking and the clinic/event team who deliver on the day

Market intelligence:

- Track which industries and company segments convert best, at what event size, and with what offer — feed this back into the territory plan
- Monitor the government-funded health screening ecosystem — which companies are enrolled, which haven't used the benefit for their employees, where the gaps are
- Maintain a view of competitor wellness programmes and HR decision-maker trends in the market

What We're Looking For

Non-negotiable:

- B2B sales experience — you have sold a product or service to corporate buyers (HR Directors, procurement leads, C-suite of SMEs) and can demonstrate a track record of building pipeline and closing corporate accounts. This is not a role for someone whose primary sales experience is B2C.
- Fluent in Bahasa Malaysia and English — you can pitch in both, build rapport in both, and read the room in both. Most of your early conversations will be in Bahasa with government-linked companies and Malay-owned SMEs; most written communication will be in English.
- Pipeline and territory management discipline — you track your activity, you know your conversion rates at each stage, and you work a systematic territory plan rather than calling whoever picks up
- Local market network — you have existing relationships in the Malaysian corporate market, or a credible understanding of how to build them fast. Cold outreach alone will not fill a worksite calendar.

Strongly preferred:

- Background in one or more of the following: corporate employee benefits or group insurance broking; workplace wellness or occupational health sales; HR technology or payroll services; SME or commercial banking with a relationship management component
- Familiarity with Malaysia's government-funded health and employee welfare programmes — understanding how companies access these benefits and what HR departments are trying to deliver against
- Mandarin proficiency — a significant portion of the Malaysian SME market is Chinese-owned; being able to build rapport in Mandarin opens doors that English alone does not
- Experience selling to all three major corporate buyer cultures in Malaysia: government-linked companies and Malay-owned businesses; Chinese family-owned SMEs; MNCs with local HR functions. These are meaningfully different sales motions and the ability to navigate all three is a genuine differentiator

Career stage:

- 5–12 years in B2B sales, business development, or corporate account management
- Has personally opened new accounts — not just managed inherited ones. You know what it feels like to get a cold prospect to a first meeting and you have a method for doing it
- Comfortable working in an early-stage environment where the pipeline tools and processes are still being built — you are not joining a team with a mature CRM and a warm inbound lead queue

- Ambitious enough to want to build the market planning function from the ground up, not just execute within an existing structure

What This Is Not

- This is not an insurance adviser role. You will not be selling policies, going through needs analyses with individual customers, or managing a personal client book.
 - This is not a marketing or events coordination role. You are responsible for generating the pipeline; marketing supports you. If the calendar is empty, that is your problem to solve.
 - This is not a role where you wait for leads to come to you. The pipeline exists because you build it.
 - This is not a role for someone who is only comfortable selling in one corporate culture. The Malaysian market requires genuine fluency across Malay, Chinese, and MNC buyer environments.

What You Get

Market position: You are entering a category that does not yet have a direct equivalent in Malaysia — worksite health screening as the entry point for mass market financial protection. There is no established competitor playbook to follow. The territory is wide open, and the person who builds the corporate relationships now owns them.

The offer you are selling: The pitch to HR is straightforward: a government-funded or subsidised health screening programme, organised end-to-end, that delivers a tangible wellness benefit to their employees. For eligible employees the screening is covered by government funding; for ineligible staff or companies that want broader coverage, a subsidised or paid package is available. The offer is flexible enough to work across a range of company profiles and budget positions. It is an easy yes for HR Directors with wellness KPIs. The difficulty is volume and consistency, not the quality of the offer.

Methodology and tools: You will work within a structured market planning methodology — territory segmentation, activity tracking, pipeline management — and with a technology platform that gives you visibility into which companies in your territory have employees eligible for the health screening benefit. You are not cold-calling blind.

Team: You will work alongside a clinic partnership team, an adviser team, and a technology and operations function. The worksite event only works when all of those pieces come together — your pipeline is the starting point for the whole machine.

Trajectory: As the programme scales, this function grows. The first hire owns the Klang Valley territory. Nationally, the function expands. The person who builds this from the ground up has a clear path to leading a market planning team rather than being a member of one.

Compensation:

- Competitive base salary benchmarked to Malaysian B2B business development market rates at the 5–12 year experience level
- Commission or quarterly bonus tied directly to confirmed event volume and corporate account retention
- Structure rewards pipeline discipline and account growth, not just individual event bookings

A Note on What Makes This Role Unusual

Most B2B sales roles in Malaysia's financial services sector sell products that HR Directors are indifferent to at best. Group insurance renewals are a compliance exercise; employee benefits reviews happen once a year. The relationship is transactional.

This role is different. You are offering something HR actually wants to be associated with — a workplace health programme, with a tangible outcome for employees on the day, and a pricing model flexible enough to fit most budgets. The door-opener is genuinely easy: "Have you organised a health and wellness event for your employees this year?" Nearly every HR Director with a wellness budget says yes to the conversation.

The harder skill is building the pipeline at volume, managing it systematically, and converting initial interest into a confirmed calendar of events month after month. That is the craft this role develops. If you have the B2B instinct and the local market knowledge, the offer does the rest.
